The third engineer of the transport Logan, whose name is Kerr, has been arrested in San Francisco on a cable request from J. J. Dunne, Assistant District Attorney. He is charged with a serious assault on one Ramos, shortly after the transport left Nagasaki, breaking the victim's jaw-in two places. Ramos is still in the hospital here from his injuries. Efforts to arrest Kerr at Honolulu failed. A witness of the assault has also been apprehended in San Francisco and will be brought back here with Kerr. The United States gunboat Wheeling is expected to arrive here on the morning of June 25 from Pago Pago en route to Bremerton to go out of commission.

The big white ship Edward Sewall is rapidly filling with sugar cargo and may be ready to sail for Delaware Breakwater next week. Captain Quick expects to make the trip in about 125 days. Yesterday was a very lazy day on the waterfront. In the Harbor Master's office, at the wharf offices, and at the pilot office and other places where waterfronters gather for business or gossip the entire forces were busily engaged holding down chairs. At the Oceanic wharf a considerable quantity of goods was taken away by the draymen, including a large number of new desks which are being transhipped to the school at Lihue, Kauai, but the chief business in hand was the work centering around the coaling of that popular flagship of the Waimanalo sugar fleet, the steamer J. A. Cummins. 'Commodore' Searle was figuring out the number of trips the Cummins had made during her career to Walmanalo.

"I guess the Cummins has averaged about two trips a week to Waimanalo for the last eighteen years," he remarked.

Captain Olssen, of the Fearless, figured that this meant about 1,800 trips. This is quite a record for the small steamer. She has met with but few mishaps and has needed but few repairs during that time so that her work as a sugar carrier has probably made her owners more money than any other steamer operating during the same time in the islands.

Anchored over in "Mudville" could be seen the small tug Kaena, which has recently been in use in dredging and towing work at Pearl Harbor and on the Honolulu bar. Some one remarked larly engaged in packing sugar from Waimanalo to Honolulu. She was an old boat when brought to the islands and as she has been here for many years her present age must be considerable.

The small inter-island schooner Mol Wahine, one of the smartest of the older vessels of the mosquito fleet, pulled in her lines from Allen & Robinson's wharf and, with her native skipper and his wife at the wheel, set all sail for Kukuihaele, Hawaii. This was about three in the afternoon.

From the Oceanic wharf could be seen the big white ship Arthur Sewall, which is moored at the Railway wharf and is about ready to go to sea with 5,500 tons of sugar for Delaware Breakwater. She is now securing a crew and will receive the small amount of sugar needed to complete her load on Saturday. The Sewall, all painted in white, presents a very fine view now and is worth the time of anyone who cares to go to the wharves to see her.

Captain Willer, formerly an assistant harbor master, left for the Coast on the Alameda and has a couple of ships in view there which are in need of captains.

Coal was being stacked up on the Oceanic wharf in readiness for the Ventura which is expected from San Francisco on Wednesday. The Sierra will probably arrive from the Colonies on Monday evening and sail for the Coast on Tuesday.

The Siberia is due from the Coast today and will bring seven days' later mail.

The small schooner Esther Buhne, Olsen, arrived from the Sound yesterday morning with a cargo of railroad ties and other lumber. On account of the inactivity in building circles a present the vessels of the Sound lumber fleet do not find as much carrying to do to Honolulu. As a result vessels of the size of the Esther Buhne and Bertle Minor are being chartered for Honolulu and the large lumber carriers are going elsewhere.

CROMWELL'S HEAD UNBURIED. Now in Possession of S. F. Wilkinson of Kent-Was Sold for $590.

LONDON, May 21.-Oliver Cromwell's body, after suffering various indignities at the hands of royalists on the restoration of the monarchy, was buried at the foot of the gallows at Tyburn, which approximately is the site of the present Marble Arch, the principal northern entrance to Hyde Park. The head, however, was never buried and now may become the center of an animated discussion as to whether it ought or ought not to be interred.

A head which has long been regarded authentically as Cromwell's is now in reverent possession of a Kentish gentleman, S. F. Wilkinson. When the body was torn from the grave in Westminster Abbey, in 1661, the head was relative will accompany the captain on impaled with those of other regicides on the roof of Westminster Hall, where it remained for twenty-five years. It fell during a storm and a sentinel picked it up. He took it home, hid it and did not mention the fact until he was on his deathbed. Then he told his wife and daughter, who sold it to a family named Russell, who were marriage connections of the Cromwell family last Russell who owned it exhibited the in London as a public show, Eventually it was sold for £118.

The original embalming was so well done that the skin remains on the eye lids, and the nose and tongue are still perfect. The famous wart on the right eyelld is still traceable and the point of the tike on which it was impaled still remains in the shall, though much altenuated through runt.
